RADIO AND TELEVISION SERVICING

Cumulative Index

1952–86

Using the Index

Radio and Television Servicing first appeared as a two-volume set in 1952. Such was the demand for this form of service information that a further five-volume edition was published in 1955. This set included most of the models contained in the first issue together with new material from the rapidly developing radio industry. Subsequently an annual up-date has appeared to provide valuable assistance to all engaged in the service trade. Other formats of the early volumes were issued containing identical information, but this index is based on the original editions as described above.

Some may feel that listing a collection spanning 30 years is unnecessary as practically all early models have long since become obsolete. However, many enquiries for older models continue to be received, often purely out of historical interest, and a full list will enable the user to quickly establish the availability or location of information on the widest possible range of models.

The listing is in strict alpha-numeric order by type or name, each entry being followed by a reference letter or number relating to the list below. Several references for a single model indicate related information: e.g. a modified version or cross-reference which should be consulted. A number of errors and duplications came to light in the preparation of this index which have been corrected and it is hoped that not too many new ones have been introduced. If any mistakes are brought to my attention, corrections can be made to the next edition of the index.
